On 5th August 2024, a pivotal session on Commodity Derivatives was held, marking an essential part of the Commerce Day celebrations. This session, organized by the Placement Team of the Department of Commerce with Dr. Kamal Gupta and Professor Dr. Manju Gupta, the Placement Coordinator, provided students with a comprehensive understanding of commodity derivatives—a crucial aspect of financial markets.

The session was led by Mr Saurabh Khanna an expert in the field, who demystified the concept of commodity derivatives, explaining their role in hedging against price fluctuations in the commodities market. Through clear explanations and practical examples, he highlighted how these financial instruments can be effectively utilized in various market conditions.

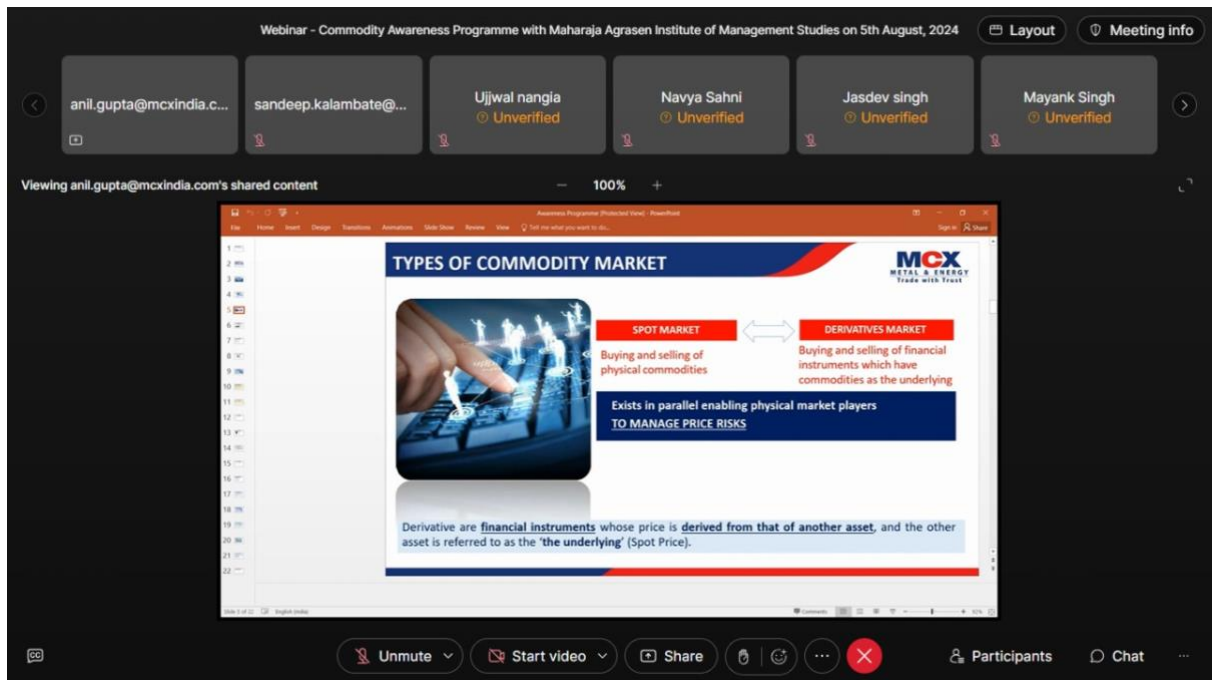

The session began with an insightful introduction, setting the tone for what was to come. Sir Saurabh's detailed exploration of the topic was not only informative but also engaging, capturing the attention of all attendees.

A key feature of the session was the open floor for questions, where students had the opportunity to directly interact with Sir Saurabh. This interactive segment allowed students to clarify their doubts and discuss the practical implications of what they had learned, making the session highly beneficial.

The session concluded with positive feedback from both students and faculty, acknowledging the valuable insights gained. The session conduct by the Placement Team and Mr. Saurabh Khanna played a vital role in making this session a success, further preparing students for their future endeavours in the corporate world.

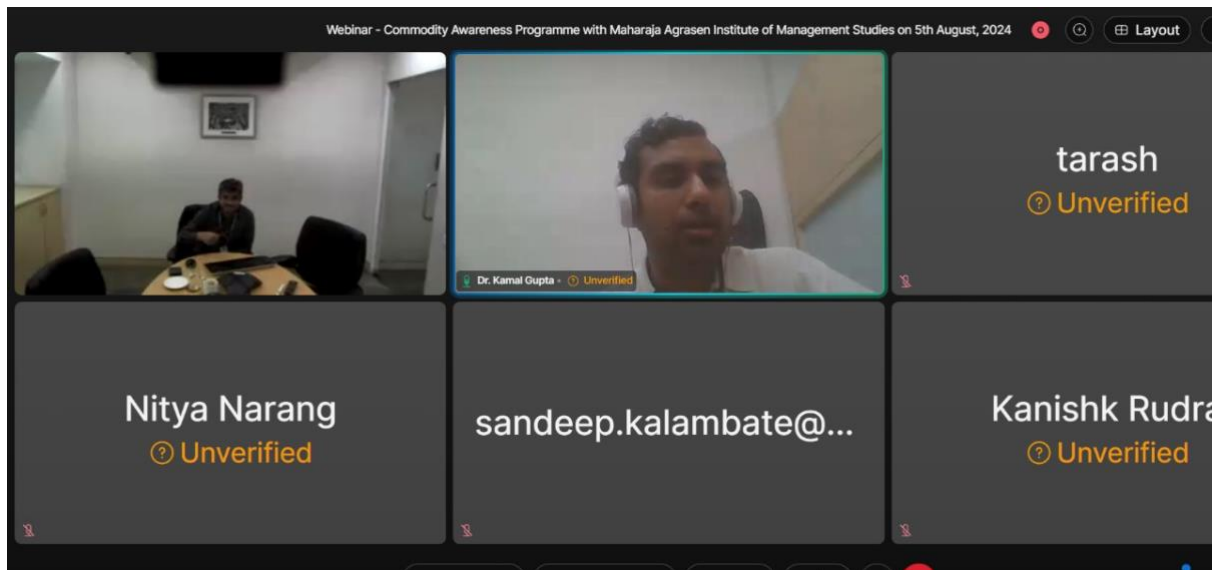

Let us have a glimpse of today's successful event.

The session starts with a PowerPoint Presentation on commodity markets.
